RESIDENTIAL MOBILITY

A lift that belongs in the architecture.

Designed around the building. Supported for the life of the system.

REQUEST A SITE REVIEW

Clear advice for homes, offices and public buildings.

Caption: Modern platform-lift integration with clear sightlines and restrained materials.

Consistency is mostly restraint.

- Use sentence case for most communication; reserve uppercase for short labels.
- Keep body copy left-aligned and avoid over-letterspacing paragraphs.
- Use generous line height and short measures for technical readability.
- Limit one page or composition to three type families and a small number of weights.
- Use Cormorant Garamond for headings, not dense specifications or tables.
- Use supplied logo artwork; the custom wordmark is not a typeface.

Fallback system

Baskerville → display
Avenir Next → body
Arial → compatibility

Fallbacks are for environments where brand fonts cannot be installed. They do not replace the preferred system in master artwork.

Hierarchy should be visible before it is read.

DO

A clear premium heading

A concise subheading creates a bridge into readable body copy.

Body copy uses comfortable leading, a practical measure and visible separation from the next content block. Labels remain short.

SMALL LABEL

DON'T

Everything the same size

ALL CAPS SUBHEADING WITH TOO MUCH TRACKING

Cramped body copy with limited line spacing makes premium communication harder to read and reduces trust. Decorative styling should never replace hierarchy.

Avoid too many weights, decorative effects and inconsistent alignment.
